- Several clients along the American Gulf Coast were able to successfully relocate to their safe houses before Hurricane Katrina struck. Their families comfortably weathered the storm with minimal disruption to their lifestyle and assets.
- Clients in California were able to shelter in place during the recent wildfires with no loss of life and minor damage to their physical property.
- Clients in Israel immediately evacuated to their underground shelter facilities and were safe during the 2006 crisis in the Middle East. They were prepared to shelter in place until the crisis ended.
- Clients in South Korea are prepared for the possibility of a nuclear attack by North Korea. Their bomb-proof retreats are provisioned for sheltering in place for up to six months or more.
- Clients in New York City are prepared for further terrorist attacks, including the possible use of dirty bombs. Their crisis plans contemplate how their families will survive and reunite.
- A Middle Eastern client's daughter, who attends school in California, is prepared should a crisis occur while she is at school, such as a major earthquake or a terror attack. The father says that he "sleeps easier at night" knowing that his daughter is prepared and safer.
- Many clients across the globe have implemented swine-flu pandemic plans. They are prepared should widespread panic and deaths occur and if food, water and medicine supplies become scarce.
